

BUSINESS.

The Decline In Prices Not Confined To Any One Article or Any Country.

The Cause Has Puzzled the Students of Political Economy as Well as Business Men.

The Adoption of Gold as a Standard Increased Production and Distribution Responsible For It.

MACHINERY HAS PLAYED ITS PART.

A merchant writing to the New York Herald says: One notable feature of the business situation is the great decline in prices, and this is not confined to any one article or any one country. Manufactured and natural products alike are affected, textiles, hardware and food all show the same tendency. In the latter branch of commerce some remarkable instances are given by the American Grocer in a review of the market reports for twenty-five years—

Canned goods show even a greater depreciation in value. Cotton purchased at fourteen cents per yard for 1850 are now selling at four and a half cents.

Steel rails in 1860 cost $12 per ton; now $24. In some of these branches special investigations or processes have had their influence, but in others these conditions do not exist. The greatest decline in most articles has occurred in the last decade, and this tendency has been more pronounced in the last three years than in any previous three years. Naturally this great change has caused both students of political economy and business men to study the cause or causes. Some are disposed to attribute it to the adoption of gold as a standard of value and the demonetization of silver. Others contend that increased production and distribution are responsible for it. A careful study of the situation leads the non-partisan, dispassionate observer to the conclusion that both of these forces have contributed to the result. It is perfectly evident to all, however, that we have been passing through a transition period such as the world has seldom seen. The old producer, manufacturer or trader has had to contend against a steady shrinkage in the value of the articles produced or handled. The only exceptions have been those protected by a monopoly in some form. Exclusive production has protected some. Patents have protected others. Trade marks or unusual excellence others. Manufacturers of primary articles, for which they have established a demand by skillful advertising, have been among those who have been exempt from the general tendency. They have bought their raw materials at a constantly decreasing cost, and, being able to control the selling price of their products, have reaped a profit which those who were exposed to the competition have not. Steam and electricity, the great factors in distribution, have been the great levelers of value.

Machinery has played its part, and is destined to do so in a constantly increasing ratio. The control of labor has always been a factor in commerce. The African slave trade was a prime factor in the question. In former times the man who owned a thousand slaves was rich; now from their labor and because rich; now the man who owns a thousand horse power embodied in machinery is rich—until some one who owns two thousand horse power or some new machine representing increased production bankrupts him. The wheel of fortune is always turning some down and others up. All this acts and reacts on the commerce of the world. A striking feature of the present time is the eagerness with which the Eastern nations are availing themselves of this modern power. The silver using nations are getting tired of buying manufactured products on a gold basis and are buying the modern slave which manufactures these products (machinery), and are not only supplying their own wants but are striving to compete with their creators. In the August number of Courier reports that the States Consul General, at Tientsin, China, states that large cotton mills recently erected at Shanghai and elsewhere in Central China have placed orders with a European firm in China for cotton mill machinery, amounting to $1,000,000. Consul McIvor, at Kanagawa, Japan, reports that the Japanese have found the same thing, and are sending cotton free of duty, are now competing with Lancashire and New England for the trade of the East in this great branch of industry. Brazil has been buying a sailing machine and making its own flour, ground from wheat grown in Argentina, cultivated with American ploughs and reaped with American reapers.

The crocodines of Australia and sheep are now transported in refrigerators by tons of thousands and dumped on the English market, in competition with similar products of the British Isles.

and of the United States. The capital of the world is called backward and forward across the oceans in the form of credit, reducing rates of interest to the minimum, and leveling values everywhere. Verily this is an age of competition, and the competition of the giants of organization instead of individual pignores, or that great commercial organism exposed to the full force of the law before it? Even the revenues from land, which is limited in amount, are being leveled by facilities of transit, in which steam is finding its competitor in electricity, and the trolley is fast making country property suburban, and suburban property city property. The statesman, the merchant, the publisher, must be no laggard if he keeps step to the music of the times. It is the appreciation of this, manifested in every corner of the world's great newspaper, the Herald, which makes it a pleasure to contribute to its columns, and if I have been more than usually discernive I trust you will pardon me.

Increase in Gold Production.

Mint Director Preston has furnished figures to the New York "Evening Post" which show a surprising expansion in the world's gold production in the calendar year 1894. In his latest annual report the Director estimated that the output of this metal in the world would amount to a little more than $192,000,000 in 1894, which was allowing for about $13,000,000 of an increase over 1893. From data which he has recently received from the different producing regions, however, he sees an output of $174,000,000 for the year in sight, and the prospect is that it may go to a still higher figure. Every important locality of production in the United States, Australia, South Africa and the rest of the great gold fields report a large increase in production in the past seven months. The steady and rapid expansion in the gold output in recent years makes a decidedly interesting and significant exhibit. The production amounted to $118,800,000 in 1893, to $129,000,000 in 1892, to $146,228,000 in 1891, and to $155,522,000 in 1890. According to the Mint Director's recent estimate, to the output in 1894 will be about $174,000,000. The United States will produce $42,000,000 or $43,000,000, against $38,000,000 last year, and South Africa's output will grow from $29,000,000 last year to $40,000,000 in 1894. The United States will advance from $33,000,000 to one of $38,000,000. The United States, if this reckoning is approximately accurate, will hang on to first place among the gold-producing localities, but the chances are that South Africa will step to the front before many more years pass.

It is an emphatically significant and encouraging statistic which figures tell. The increase in the world's production in the five years beginning with 1890 and ending with 1894 will be fully 40 per cent, which is many times greater than the increase in population or business. Moreover, the aggregate increase is growing greater and greater as time passes. An immense stimulus has been given to gold production by the anti-slavery policy of India and the United States in 1893. The miners, finding silver production unprofitable, are turning their attention to gold. The alleged danger of a gold scarcity which the freetraders have been preaching is a hallucination which has forever lost its power to frighten sensible men. The gold production is much more than meeting the world's needs in the exchange, and there is an exceedingly strong probability that it will do this for scores of years to come, if not for all time.—N. OUR HOMES.

No Mortal Can Have a Better Start In Point Than a Pious and Soul Satisfying Home.

It is a Thousand Times Better to Have a Honest Father And a True Hearted Mother Than To Inherit Riches or Social Position.

Don't Bring Your Daughters Up Believing That the Chief End of Life is to Marry a Bank Account.

A MANLY MAN 'THO POOR IS BETTER.

And he left them, and went out at the city into Bethany; and he lodged there.—Matthew, xxi, 7.

After a day of continuous harassment in Jerusalem Jesus needed the repose which only confiding friendship could furnish. By the light of the stars he found his way to the little village of Bethany, two miles distant, and enjoyed the hospitality of a household consisting of Martha, Mary and Lazarus.

It is left to the imagination to picture that group of four, for history has given us only a bare outline and a neglected detail. What comfort came to that tired heart, what subjects were discussed, what hopes or fears were indulged in during the evening's conversation, we shall never know. But we may venture to say that the Son of God found rest and strength within the walls of that happy Bethany home. It was like a strain of soft music to the traveler who has sought his couch, and he sank into dreamless sleep under its soothing influence.

The home is our asylum, and the love of dear ones is our defense. In the plan of divine Providence the home occupies a position of conspicuous importance. A happy home is the property of a useful life for every child reared under its benign watchfulness; a home in which discord prevails sends its boys and girls into the world with handicapped aspirations.

The child who carries sweet memories with him carries also a shield for protection, but he who has been exiled from his father's home, while the world is full of attacks, a happy home in the background throws a radiance on each succeeding day, even though the day be stormy and tempestuous.

The good father lives in the life of the boy long after that father has crossed the threshold of a cemetery, and the good mother still speaks to the daughter when that daughter has died of her own.

No mortal can have a better starting point than a pious and soul satisfying home. It is a thousand times better to have a honest father and a true hearted mother than to inherit riches or social position. An empty wallet and a father's blessing, a glum home and a mother's love are a safer equipment for the attainment of happiness than millions of money without the blessing and the love.

We are making some serious mistakes on this subject, which the freetraders have a hearty by and by. We are too ambitious for our children in the direction of social prominence and too neglectful of them in the direction of character.

Daughters are brought up to believe that the chief end of life is to marry a husband and an equipage rather than a home. When the marriage is a deficit, however, and at sometimes does, and the equipage is sold under the hammer, the poor girl wakes up to the discovery that she has had an establishment to accept in a few years, but not a home. The logic of events is relentless, and natural affection, which is the only thing worth living for, since it sweetens and deprecates with adversity, is found to be wanting. A love that depends for its continuance on good fortune has very small value, and yet marriage vows are renewed every day which their origin in avarice, and will certainly be broken unless the avarice continues to be satisfied.

There is no other foundation for a true home than the union of two souls by the bonds of holy affection. Other experiments have been tried, but not a substitute for that affection has yet been found. The end to be sought is happiness, and if you fail in that you fail in everything. A wounded heart is not healed by costly amusement, and riches never yet assuaged a night's grief. Her adorned jewels cannot be assuaged by diamonds and splendor, and many a woman has been driven to desperation and wrong doings in the spirit of her credit. A woman is a woman. Whatever else she needs, man loves most of all, for this is a hard life and love alone keeps the man from going crazy. If he cannot have it he takes excitement instead, and then the end is not far off. Whatever else the woman craves it is all subordinate, whether she knows it or not, to the longing affection of a man, and if that is denied her her nature becomes volcanic and irrepressible.

Without the restraining influence of love we all become more or less demagogue. But if we have it we can part with everything, health and still be content. That is the verdict of the generations, and it cannot be reversed.

In your home, therefore, and regarding your children, you should so teach the boys and girls that they will develop independence of character and moral principle. What the world may say should influence them very little, but what they themselves think is right should influence them a great deal. Plain and solid common sense is worth more than anything else. Of two lovers a good poor man is better than a bad rich man. Pictures and furniture and rugs and footmen are desirable in their way, but you cannot afford to give a human heart to a man. It may be unpleasant to live in a side street, but a side street with peace is better than the avenue with misery. Your acquaintances may sting their shoulders—it is their privilege to do so if they choose—but if the home is bright and cheerful what care you?

If fathers and mothers would see to it that their homes were made happy, and have no other desire than that their children should make happy homes for themselves, this barrier and sale which enters so largely into our views of marriage would cease and the millennium would come this way.

What this old world needs is sterling and unwavering moral principle, and the independence to stand by it. These qualities of character are not taught in the home by parents who believe in them and exempt them from their own lives, or they will never be acquired at all.

After that you can trust both sons and daughters to reach a safe conclusion when they are called upon to leave the hearthstone of their childhood and make a new home for themselves.

They will have already learned that though riches and happiness sometimes go together, it is better to depend on happiness rather than riches for a safe journey through life.—N. Y. Herald.

The Evil of Office-Seeking.

The speech of Public Printer Hendel to a number of men recently appointed to places in his office points out in a frank and forcible way the evil effects of seeking public employment for support. "I do not give you these appointments because I need you," he said, "nor because I want you, but simply to be shut of you." That is to say, he made places for them on account of their persistent pleading and their known personal necessities. "I warn you," he continued, "to save some money and get out of here, to be able to hold up your heads, and go home and do something." This advice applies to all those who are looking for positions in the different departments at Washington. Their services are of a kind that takes away their independence and self reliance, and otherwise unites them for the duties of life. The salaries that they receive are generally smaller than those paid in the various forms of regular industry and commerce, and at the same time they can only hope to earn a living with the hardest four-century present that they may be turned out any day. They thus become dregs and apoplexy, and when they loose their places they are perfectly helpless.

In view of these well-known and obvious facts of the sort of occupation that is offered at Washington the wonder is that any intelligent young man is willing to accept it, and yet the number of ways largely exceed the number of places. There seems to be an impression that somehow it is better to work for the Government than for a private firm or corporation, and that to live in Washington and be a part, however unimportant, of the political machinery there implies more happiness than can be secured by staying at home and engaging in a legitimate and permanent business. This view of the matter is a miserable fallacy, as every one finds out who puts it to a practical test. The young man who wants to succeed in the world of affairs cannot afford to take the chances of disappointment and demoralization that are involved in that kind of service. It is a life of the most unrelenting and hard, the forfeiture of his self respect, the loss of his real opportunities of prosperity. Such is the lesson of experience as illustrated in the case of a young man who was a department clerk at Washington, and who was largely to throw away ambition, to buy talents, to wear a badge of servitude. There is nothing in it that makes it preferable to any one of the numerous ways in which energy can be profitably exerted in private life and it should be shunned as a temptation that leads to inevitable failure.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

James Kincheloe, the jeweler, can suit you both in quality and price.

Prompt attention to all will be my motto.—James Kincheloe, the jeweler, Hardinsburg.

Musical instruments purchased of me never lose their sweet tones.—James Kincheloe, Hardinsburg.

James Kincheloe having succeeded the well-known establishment of T. C. Lewis &amp; Co., of Hardinsburg, desires all quietness under the new law. County Judge Adkinson says the members of the court must act upon the matter for the public good. The new law gives the court the power to levy a tax for the purpose of keeping up the public roads, and it is believed at this time that this law should be put in force. In such an event there will have to be a road supervisor elected for the entire county and also one for each district. In making this selection the court should get the best man they can find. The who have been spoken of for the position are Mr. J. E. Monarch of this place and Wm. Stith, of Bewleyville. There will doubtless be other applicants before the road judges. The Supervisor is appointed for two years and his compensation fixed by the court.

The Fiscal Court which is in session this week will have some important business to transact. That which will bring forth the most discussion, is the public good question under the new law.
